Women of the year: On bubbles, babies and baskets

Patricia G. Maritz

Down-bent astride the rowdy rapids - slim and strong, brains skimming the water – the hazel-skinned laundresses

Garments rinsed, wrung and dried - are lifted to the wind, folded into baskets - raised to crowns …

Robes of cyan, saffron, vermilion…
reflect through the shirred wimple of a capering current, billowing through white suds and fast fingers

Maiden, sister, mother… bare breasted with robes waist-ward sliding, as infants raveningly clutch at a nipple to mouth

Stain-blended bubbles frisk on the water,
down-blown… adrift, cyclamen, citron and indigo streaked mud marbles the river banks

High up a hill…
they wind their way along the footpath, figures diminishing as it curves, until only a basket above the summit bobs

Source: This photo is used with the permission of the author and photographer, Patricia G. Maritz